

You And Your Friends Can Order A Giant Margarita Inside A Watermelon

Here we go again.

Here we are again, you guys. This time in the giant and potentially problematic food universe, we have not one but TWO menu items for you to feast your eyes on. Cantina Rooftop in New York City is serving a 14-pound taco, and Mexican fare of this stature can only be paired with one thing: a massive watermelon margarita served INSIDE an actual watermelon.

The taco, which has a tortilla made from scratch using the most genius hack, can be ordered with either chicken, beef, or pork. It has layers of all your favorite fixings, like salsa and avocado crema. As for the margarita, watermelon is scooped from its rind and puréed, then poured back inside with tequila, simple syrup, and lemon juice. Name a more iconic duo—I'll wait.

Both items are available as part of the restaurant's "Big Wednesdays" promotion. The margarita serves eight to 10 people while the taco serves six to eight, so plan your group trip accordingly. You can order them individually for $80 each or together for $140.
